FEAR AND LOATHING IN LAS QUANTAS PHYSICAS

Hunter S. Thompson accosts and abuses crippled scientist Stephen Hawking, but in a nice kind of way

It was November, 1993, my body was weary and my mind fried. Or maybe it was the other way around. Either way, I had just returned to the owl farm at Woody Creek from a gruesome journey to New York City. Walking magazine had sent me to the big city to cover the less glamorous aspects of the New York Marathon.

I got there two weeks late and spent the entire time hanging out in Greenwich Village. I remember stopping scores of people on Bleecker Street and asking them if they'd seen the Pope. Most just turned and walked briskly away from me. Some co-ed with a tight NYU sweatshirt said that she had seen him standing in line at Mondo Perso. As far as I know, I ended up turning in a story on the speed-walking incident in the Thanksgiving Day Parade.

Next thing I knew it was February, so I caught the first cab to JFK and got the hell out of the city as fast as I could. Only a twisted bastard like Sinatra could claim to want to "wake up in a city that never sleeps." How can you wake up if you never get any sleep? Moron insomniacs are creating bad craziness in every cheeseball nightclub these days.

I was happy to get back to the Owl Farm and my pet peacocks. They told me it was 1994, and where the hell had I been all this time, but I just ignored them, cracked open the champagne and put on my favorite paper hat.

Before I had time to blow my fun whistle and grab a glass of iced Wild Turkey, my phone rang. By the sound of the ring, I knew it was bad news. Don't ask me how I know a bad ring from a good one, I just know. With a head full of acid and almost thirty years of gonzo-journalistic experience somehow credited to my name, I can tell a good ring from a shitty one, and this smelled worse than my college roommate. And it wouldn't be scared off as easily.

My agent informed me that the Plague, some moronic, student-run humour magazine wanted me to do a review of Stephen Hawking's latest book. You know Hawking, that diseased physics genius. I think he's on late-night cable with that show, Physics Friends. I don't know. Pop culture has gotten really stupid.

Well, I was not only supposed to review his book, but I was being flown to his home in Cambridge to get the story firsthand. My agent said that the arrangements had already been made and that a car was on its way to pick me up.

Ye Gods, once more into the air I go. Since my bags were already packed from the New York fiasco, I figured that I had time to grab some goodies from the cupboard. I snagged a bag of coke, a sheet of blotter paper, and a liter of Wild Turkey. I was only going to be in Cambridge for a day or two, so I figured I had enough shit to hold me over. I decided right there that if I was physically capable I would make an attempt to remove the flight-waitress' skimpy outfit at thirty thousand feet. Unless the eight-legged aliens prevent me. Those bastards never let me have any fun.

The limo ride and the flight to Cambridge are a blur. About all I can say for sure was that a fat Haitian named "Jorge" drove me to Boulder, gave me my tickets, and pointed me toward my gate. The next thing I remember, I was pissing into the garbage can in a bar at Chicago O'Hare. I probably missed my flight to Cambridge, but I'm not sure. By my calculations, I should have reached Boston at 10:23 p.m. on Thursday, February 17, but instead I woke up late on Friday when some guy slammed down his baggage next to me on the merry-go-round thing. I found a key to a Royal Inn hanging out of my coat pocket and sat there for a while, pondering the implications of this ominous development.

I picked up my rental car around noon. Sunday noon, that is. It was a candy red 1994 Pontiac Grand Prix, paid for by those Plague dopes. I wondered if their managing editor has ever kissed a girl besides his mom. The drive to Cambridge was crazy. Twice, I swerved off the road for fear of hitting the giant Gila monsters which suddenly appeared in front of me. I kept hearing these ghostly voices in my head saying "You have got to be kidding me. Thank you, Bert I Gordon."

I almost swerved a third time, but by then I realized that there are no Gila Monsters east of Nevada. And I had some trouble with those Massachusetts drivers—all those morons were driving on the wrong side of the road. I guess those snotty academics in Cambridge think they can be more liberal in their observance of the rules of the road than regular folk.

[What Thompson never seemed to realize is that Stephen Hawking lives in England, not Massachusetts. This not only accounts for his difficulties on the road, but also his "lost" day of travel. We attempted to explain this to him, but he threatened to sue us for 'vicious assault with deadly amphibians, illegal aliens, and Haitians'—ed.]

The drive didn't take but an hour, though the trip itself took over three. Between the monster hallucinations, swerving constantly to avoid certain death, and pulling over periodically to snort some coke, I was lucky to have made it there by sundown. Sundown Tuesday, that is.

I eased into the Hawking driveway at a stately 35-miles-per-hour, much to the dismay of Mrs. Hawking. I would have felt terrible about that, had I been anywhere near the planet at the time. There's about a 62% chance that she's a nice woman, and an attractive one, too. I'm a little hazy. I might have fucked-up when I introduced myself to her as Irving R. Levine and told her that I was here to take nude photos of her and her husband's wheelchair for Oui Magazine. But then, there's really no way to tell with these stoic New Englanders.

Mrs. Hawking showed me in and quickly shuffled me past her gawking children. She led me into a large, oak-floored study—obviously where her husband does his deepest thinking and crime-solving. It was a cold, vast room. The walls were lined with autographed pictures of Galileo, Newton, Einstein, and Matt Groenig; the bookcases were filled with weighty, leather-bound tomes. I poked my head in a nearby oak door to find a room filled with weighty, leather-bound women. Strange.

There was a giant photo of an amoeba on the wall, right behind the computer desk where the mad genius was slowly working away. And slowly wasting away. Allegedly, Hawking is a paraplegic who suffers from some horrible, debilitating disease; lactose intolerance, I think. Anyway, he can't speak or move any of his limbs—except for his right index finger, which he uses to tap on a keypad, among other things. (I asked his wife how his finger came to be three inches in diameter and rippled with muscles, but she just turned pale and walked away. There's just no figuring out these Puritans). The keypad is wired to a computer, on which he can do his work, and to a voice synthesizer, through which he speaks. The best in Japanese Karaoke technology.

I introduced myself to Hawking. He drooled. At that moment, I almost went to pieces. I had tackled some tough stories before, but trying to interview a gurgling physics genius while under the influence of a kilo of coke and a gut full of whiskey was asking too much. I had two choices, either run out of the room and say to hell with the interview, or stick around on my own terms and see what happens. Paralyzed by fear,

I decided to skip the small talk and start asking the hard questions. "Two questions: what's the entire universe made out of this week, and do you and your old lady still get it on regularly?"

I was shocked that such awful, pseudo-intellectual words came out of my mouth, so much so that I blacked out momentarily. I instinctively reached into my coat pocket and grabbed two hits of acid. I stuck one under my tongue and the other under my right eyelid, and began to relax. Then I realized where I was. Ye Gods, two fuck-ups in under a minute!

Not only had I asked the renowned physicist Stephen Hawking whether he still nailed his wife, but I also took illegal drugs in front of him with the ease of an aide to retired General Manuel Noriega. This was not a good start. At this point, feelings of self-loathing overwhelmed me and my cerebellum just shut down....

[Here the manuscript ends. Dr. Thompson refused to finish the story, so we have tried to piece together just what transpired at the Hawking interview. Fortunately, Thompson had somehow remembered to turn on his tape recorder before entering the Hawking home. What you see here is a transcript of the audio tape conversation between the two doctors—ed.]

cigarette] do you really believe that you have given us an accurate picture of the universe's development?

STEPHEN HAWKING: So far, my theory on the origin and development of the universe in which we live has yet to meet serious opposition from members of the scientific community.

HST: Our universe? Are you saying that there might be others?

SH: Yes, that is a distinct possibility.

HST: Jesus, professor, you really are a nut. I mean, with all due respect, how the hell can there be more than one universe?

SH: Read my book. It gives, in simple terms for your benefit, an explanation of my theory of the possibility of multiple universes.

HST: [more coughing] You have a glass I can borrow? And some ice?

SH: No.

HST: By the way, why is there a giant picture of an amoeba on your wall?

SH: Amoeba? Where?

HST: Right there, behind your desk. That big blue and green blob...

SH: That's Monet's "Waterlilies".

HST: Oh, I see. I hope you don't mind me drinking straight from the bottle. [a long silence] Now let's get down to some more of the good stuff. [slurping noises] Oh, and what you were talking about, too. Isn't it true that your theory of the possibility of multiple universes is contingent upon the Women would swamp him at parties. He never got a moment's peace. Frogaine® Tropical Solution (masongil 99%) works by augmenting the body's natural estrogen output. Have you ever wondered why there are more bald men than women? A woman's estrogen output is naturally greater, accounting for the rarity of female pattern baldness. This natural advantage has been unavailable to men for centuries...until now.

Research concludes that two applications a day over a period of three months are required before initial visual confirmation of progress occurs. Include it in your daily regimen of contact lens, cucumber mask, and retainer cleansing when you wake up and go to bed, like brushing your teeth. Data on the application of Frogaine® to one's teeth remains inconclusive.

With limited side effects (see back) Frogaine® offers new hope to men and women suffering from total, partial, pattern and fractal baldness.

Frogaine® is not a cure, it is a way of life. Continued success is maintained only by continued use. In addition to losing what hair they had, 17% of those who stopped using Frogaine® went into withdrawal and had to use the Frogaine Patch™.

Get your free Information Kit today. You may even be eligible for a free, private, hair-loss consultation with a proctologist. And because Frogaine® requires membership in a 70s Appreciation Society or acid-rock fan organization, we'll include a free issue of Peter Frampton Quarterly. We'll be sending you a list of nearby doctors, geologists, and FBI-trained psychics who may be able to offer you a free, private hair-loss consultation if you are balding spiritually.

Frogaine®
Tropical
Solution masóngil 99%

The only product never proven to grow hair.

What is FROGAINE®?

FROGAINE® topical solution is a subscription medicine for use on the scalp that is used to induce augmented hair growth in men and women known as apologetic apoplexia. FROGAINE® is a tropical form of masóngil, in order to scalp.

How effective is FROGAINE®?

Anthropologists conducted four, 12-month cross-sectional case histories. After four months 98% of recently born subjects had grown hair. The figure had increased to 98.5% three years later. 76% of the subjects had a hair increase of one-fifth of their total body weight. A control group using a placebo (without masóngil) was only 75% effective.

How soon can I expect results from using FROGAINE®?

Studies show that the response time to FROGAINE is between six months and 14 seconds. It takes us about 16 hours to get out of the country so certainly no sooner than that.

How long do I need to use FROGAINE®?

Basically as long as you want to have hair. If you wish to continue treatment after you are dead, several trust fund options are available.

What happens if I stop using FROGAINE®? Will I keep the new hair?

FROGAINE® is not a cure, it is a way of life. Continued success is maintained only by continued use. In addition to losing what hair they had, 17% of those who stopped using FROGAINE® went into withdrawal and had to use the FROGAINE® Patch. Information on becoming one of the FROGAINE® Patch Kids™ is provided in the advanced information packet.

How much FROGAINE® should I use?

You should apply a five dollar dose of FROGAINE® twice a day to your clean, dry scalp, once in the morning and once at night before bedtime, unless you work third shift, in which case you should apply it once at night and once in the morning before bedtime. After applying FROGAINE® with your fingers, see a doctor. FROGAINE® must remain an unsightly goopy mess on the top of your head for at least four hours before you go out in public. Do not attempt to wash your hair for at least four hours after application: reaction with the shampoo may result in chlorine gas. If you are totally bald, what are you doing with shampoo? Please refer to the Instructions For Use Manual: Volume 2 in the package.

What if I miss a dose or forget to use FROGAINE®?

Your orthodontist will be very disappointed in you. Do not try and make up for missed applications (unless a late fee is paid). You should restart your twice-daily doses at day one on the usage chart.

What are the most common side effects reported in clinical studies with FROGAINE®?

Side effects were minimal; only 7% reported temporary hearing loss, 15% reported neck stiffness, and 30% complained that their hats no longer fit them. FROGAINE® should not be applied to irritated, sunburned or prosthetic foreheads. You should ask your doctor to discuss the possible side effects of FROGAINE® with you. FROGAINE® is not recommended for members of government, parliament, or participants in the Federal Witness Protection Program.

What are some of the side effects reported?

FROGAINE® was used by lots of people (many of them female) in placebo controlled clinical trials. Exempt from demonological events (involving some skin), no individual reaction or reactions grouped by body systems appeared to be more common. Dermatologic: A dumb name for a software company—6.34%; Respiratory: most patients were still breathing—12.3%; Gastrointestinal: nausea, vomiting and metabolism—5.5%; Neurologic: headache, hangover, deja vu (nope, not gonna do it); Genital tract: ask your doctor; Special Senses: telekenisis, ESP, Hegelian photography—0.3%; Allergic: ? Don't use it; Psychiatric: anxiety, depression, fatigue, paranoia, plaid; Scottish ancestry; Hemalogic: "I have the powerrrrr"—0.000001%, failed; Encyclopedia, Neumismatics: looseness of change 2.3%; Philitelec: dryness of tongue—12%. FROGAINE® use has been monitored for the past five years. No one has died yet.

What are the possible side effects that could affect the heart, circulation, and endocrine glands when using FROGAINE®?

As long as you return your books when you've finished so other people can read them, you should be all right, but you could die. If you are driving and your hair or someone else's hair obstructs your vision while you are driving or operating heavy machinery it would be bad. Your hair could catch on fire. Birds could nest in your hair and freak you out if you've watched The Birds within the past year. "Freak you out" is not a medical risk recognized by the M.D.A.A.M.A., A.D.A., A.P.A., M.T.A or M.O.M.A.

What factors may increase the risk of serious side effects with FROGAINE®?

It is not recommended that FROGAINE® be used in tandem. Or with cocaine, heroin, THC, LSD, or other popular illegal drugs. FROGAINE® should not be used in conjunction with Hair Club For Men. FROGAINE® should not be applied to irritated, sunburned or prosthetic foreheads.

Can people with high blood pressure use FROGAINE®?

Many people with high blood pressure lead normal and productive lives, but they should be monitored more closely by their health care provider. People taking high blood pressure medication should not use FROGAINE®. People with high blood pressure who like to binge on potato chips and Oreos at the same time should not use FROGAINE® because we will get blamed for it.

Should any precautions be followed?

Keep children clear of electrical outlets before applying FROGAINE®; look both ways before crossing the street on your way to buy FROGAINE®; don't go to an ATM machine at night to get money to pay for FROGAINE®. Beware low bridges. Beware Todd Bridges.

Are there any special precautions for women?

If he doesn't have a condom, tell him to get lost, although condoms themselves are only something like 89% effective. Know who you are sleeping with, best to keep it to family and friends. FROGAINE® is not recommended for use by pregnant women or their children.

Can FROGAINE be used by children?

FROGAINE® is sold to children® under the condition that they get parental permission before using it on Dad. The safety of the use of FROGAINE® on non-child star children has not been tested, and no, it doesn't work on pets, so don't even think it, Jr. I mean what can be said about hair replacement that hasn't been said on The Simpsons anyway?

universe being shaped a bit like a horse saddle? You know, the concept your pal Roger Penrose came up with.

SH: Well, I...

HST: No bullshit, Hawking. You know as well as I do that the Penrose model has gone the way of the passenger pigeon. Nobody believes that horse-saddle shaped universe crap anymore. And don't you even think about bringing up the primordial matter sea that you snookered your dopey biographer with. You know you're grasping at straws! You can't dupe me or the American public! What kind of fascist are you! Goddamnit you gimp!!! Speak up! I'm tired of listening to that fucking monotone computer of yours!!

You worthless bastard!! Goddamnit, this country is the home of the American dream, and your stupid Kennedys have been fucking everything up!!! Bring back America, the place where Gatsby could be Gatsby!!! Horatio Alger. Doesn't that name mean anything to you?! My attorney has—

At this point the voices on the tape become far too garbled to understand. The sound of Thompson's yelling, intermittently interrupted by Hawking's squak box, fills three minutes of the tape. Then a loud crash is heard and the tape goes silent. From what we gather, Dr. Thompson dumped Stephen Hawking and his wheelchair into the pool in a fit of rage, and stormed out of the room. He then drove his rental car to a local pub and proceeded to drink himself back to normal. Apparently he was arrested during the course of the evening, because he tried to call us the next morning from Cambridge and asked us for $2500 for bail. He kept babbling about stupid cops with no guns demanding measures of weight rather than money. Being used to whipping out unreasonable sums of money for absolutely no good reason, we complied, on the assurance that he would forward the interview to our offices by UPS.

Evidently, he stuck a few stamps on the cassette case and dropped it near a mailbox; we received the tape two weeks later, with postage due. We also received a collect call from the Cambridge authorities; a secretary informed us that should we see Dr. Thompson, we are obligated to remind him that if he tries to enter the United Kingdom or any of its dependencies, he would be executed by keel-hauling, and fully prosecuted. All attempts to contact Dr. Thompson have, thankfully, been unsuccessful.
